Free Residential Environmental Science Summer Camp

Currently in S3? Considering studying environmental science, geography or biology?

Would you like the chance to gain hands-on, career-relevant experiences, delivered by University of Glasgow Lecturers and environmental professionals?

The University of Glasgow, in partnership with RES, is offering a free, week-long residential field course for up to 19 students, to be held at the Scottish Centre for Ecology and the Natural Environment on the banks of Loch Lomond.

Here you will have the opportunity to experience a variety of skills useful to your studies and future careers, including species identification and taxonomy, passive surveying methods such as acoustic monitoring, habitat classification, mapping with geographic information systems and even the basics of statistical analysis.

Whether you are considering university or simply exploring careers in the field, we're open to all!

Applications are open now and will close on the 30th March 2026.

Apply here: gla.ac/EnviroLab
